

Shukla's work is an amalgamation of the real and the surreal; she strives to merge the two. However, one may observe that her works deviate more towards accidental experimentation.

The strong but very apparent stroke work is characteristic of her work; she has chosen this to be her style. The strong contrasts, sudden colour merges and clear strokes truly reflect her personality-passionate, emotional and a deep philosopher.

Shukla's works are an expression of her thoughts, an extension of her own self. They do not, in any way, try to interfere with an individual's thoughts, but they would definitely induce one to think.

The rhythm and gyrations of the paintings have to be deciphered by the viewer. The dance of the colours, the musicality of the strokes, the intrigue of the subjects give rise to 'The Sound of Vibrations'....

This set of paintings, entitled 'The Flight of The Phoenix', attempts to explore the world of colour and the journey of life. In doing so, a continuous circle of evolution evolves. This journey of discovery will surely appeal to the viewer and once undertaken, one would enjoy the same.

Voila,

Bon Voyage!
